Abstract

This collection contains a compilation of early administrative records of the American Academy of Physician Assistants (formerly known as the American Association of Physician's Assistants or AAPA). These papers were contributed by William Stanhope, Thomas Godkins, Roger Whittaker and Dan Fox who served as presidents of the Academy during its formative years and were members of the Oklahoma University Physician Assistant Program at the time the papers were transmitted. The more recent papers contained in this collection are from the personal papers of Kevin Boyles, a member of the Academy's staff who maintained archival records and who served as the executive director of the Society for the Preservation of Physician Assistant History when its headquarter was located in Alexandria, VA.

Historical Note

Established in 1968, the American Academy of Physician Assistants (AAPA) is recognized as the national voice for PAs in medical and surgical specialties. Originally the organization was incorporated as the American Association of Physician's Assistants then changed its name to the American Academy of Physician's Associates in June 1971 and again in February 1972 to the American Academy of Physician's Assistant. The 's was eventually dropped leaving the organization with its current title. In 1973, the AAPA and the Association of Physician Assistant Programs (APAP, now the Physician Assistant Education Association, PAEA) established a joint national office in Washington, DC. The headquarters moved to Arlington, Virginia in the late 1970's and moved to the current location in Alexandria, Virginia in 1988. The AAPA has a federated structure of 56 charter constituent chapters representing the interest of PAs in 50 states, the District of Columbia, Guam and the federal services comprised of the Army, Air Force, Navy, Public Health Service and Department of Veteran Affairs. The AAPA House of Delegates (HOD) meets annually to develop policy and procedures and adopt resolutions for the organization. Today there are more than 81,000 practicing PAs.

Overview

This collection contains the administrative records of the American Academy of Physician Assistants compiled by its first nine presidents during the Academy's formative years. Of particular interest are files containing correspondence, newsletters and publications of four organizations that were competing with the Academy to become the "spokesperson" for PAs nationally. These organizations include: the American Association of Physician Assistants, the American College of Physician Assistants, the American Society of Orthopedic Physician Assistants and the National Association of Physician's Assistants. In addition to the early records, this collection contains correspondence, newsletters, census data, reports and manuscripts. The collection also contains newspaper clippings and a yearbook containing photographs from annual conferences held from 1972-1985. Also included are Academy memorabilia, publications and other related materials.

Collection Arrangement

This collection consists of 53 folders arranged in alphabetical order by form or subject. The collection is a subseries of the Society's Archival Collection series, Organization and Institution Records, 1972-2001.
